Why do you need an International Insurance Policy?

The world of business is more interconnected than ever before — which means businesses are expanding their operations overseas. If your business operates internationally, an International Insurance Policy is essential for providing coverage across your business dealings. International Insurance gives you the peace of mind you need to operate abroad knowing your business and employees are covered.

Policy features may vary by carrier.

What Does an International Insurance Policy Cover?

International Insurance is typically not a single policy. Rather, it is a bundle of policies that are customized to help your business cover your most important risks while operating internationally. The coverages in an International Insurance Policy might include:

General Liability

An International General Liability Policy is a broad insurance option that provides all the same coverages a domestic general liability policy might cover in the countries where you do business. An International General Liability Policy will protect your business from international lawsuits based on accidents, injuries, or negligence in your operations.

Product Liability

An International Product Liability policy will cover losses associated with property damage or bodily injury that might result from the production or distribution of your company's products.

Professional Liability

If your business provides any type of service abroad, an International Professional Liability Policy may be added to your International Insurance to provide protection and coverage for lawsuits or defense costs that arise from accusations of malpractice.

Is your business adequately covered?
